Dear Reader,

The Access to Public Information Act was published in the State Gazette No. 55 of 7 July 2000. It is the first of its kind in the Bulgarian legal space. It regulates the free public access to information, which is collected by the state authorities and institutions.

The philosophy of the law is twofold: creating opportunities for the citizens and the legal entities to make well-informed choices and controlling the state effectively by enhancing the process of regular reporting of the official affairs, thus making the decision-making process more transparent.

As being one of the main groups of obliged bodies under the Access to Information Act the local government authorities have to interpret and explain the scope of this Act. The Local Government Reform Foundation turned to the Access to Information Programme team in order to prepare a practical handbook on the application and the hypotheses of APIA specially designed to answer the needs of the local authorities. The team included Gergana Juleva, Fani Davidova, Alexander Kashumov (AIP) and Emilia Panajotova (LGRF).

We believe that the following presentation and appendixes will directly influence on the effectiveness of the local administration activities in the access to information sphere. We also think that this is a necessary step for developing a transparent local self-government in Bulgaria.

The LGRF and AIP teams welcome all your questions and recommendations.

Decision for refusal to provide access
I. Who has the obligation to grant information

The bodies obliged to grant information under APIA are specified in Art. 3, Art.15 and Art.16 of the Act. The division of the obliged bodies into groups is based on the type of information they are obliged to give. One of the common features for all of them is that their activity is of public character.

1. Obliged bodies under Art.3 of APIA

The Act divides them into two groups:

A) First Group

- State authorities

  The state and local authorities are in the first group (Art. 3(1)). They can expressly empower a respective official to deal with the information requests. The Act does not contain any specific requirements regarding the type of the public bodies. Therefore the notion embraces:

  - the Legislative - The National Assembly;
  - the Judiciary - The Prosecutor’s Office, The Investigation Office, the Courts;
  - the Executive.

  The list includes institutions that do not belong to any of these authorities – the President, the Constitutional Court, the Auditor General. The Executive branch includes both central and local authorities as obliged bodies.

- Local authorities

  Both the Municipal Council and the Mayor are local authorities. The Mayor does fulfill some tasks assigned by the central state authorities in cases strictly provided by the law. In such cases he acts as a state authority. Both Mayors of municipalities and city neighborhoods are obliged under APIA.

B) Second Group

There are several bodies in the second group. The first categories of these are subjects of the public law bodies, which are neither state nor local bodies. In cases provided by the law they carry out some official activities in order to satisfy some public interests. This is the reason they are included in the list of obliged bodies.

Example: Bulgarian National Bank, the National Health Insurance Fund, etc.
Second categories are individuals and legal entities that receive financing from the state budget. The legal entities can vary from trade corporations to foundations.

A third category is the mass media. Its area of activity is that of imparting information and everyday commentaries through TV, news and radio. The means by which they are financed is irrelevant to their status as obliged bodies under APIA.

2. Obliged bodies under Art.15 of APIA
These are the heads of administrative structures in the Executive system. The types of administrative structures are exhaustively listed in the Order for the Conditions and Procedures for Leading a Register of the Administrative Structures and the Papers of the Executive Bodies.

3. Obliged body under Art. 16 of APIA
The Minister of Public Administration

II. What kind of information is available under APIA?

1. Scope of the public information
Access to any kind of public information can be requested. There are no limitations or special requirements concerning the medium in which the information is held. It can be paper, disk, CD, etc.
The public information under this Act has two specific features –
• it is related to public life in Bulgaria, and,
• it gives its user the opportunity to build up his/her own opinion on the activity of the obliged bodies.

These criteria are very broad and can lead to controversial interpretation. The scope of “public information” is somewhat determined by the legal definition of “personal information” (i.e. nonpublic information) in APIA, Additional provision §1. Personal information can refer to a certain individual or legal entity. Access to personal information cannot be permitted under Art. 2 (3). The Administrative Service of the Individuals and the Legal Entities Act provides for access to such information. There are also some special procedures that allow access to personal data such as the Civil Status of the Individuals Act.

2. Types of public information under Art. 3(1), Art.15 and Art.16
The central and local authorities are obliged to grant access to any information that is in the remit of their functions and is in their possession (see Art. 10 and Art. 11 related to Art. 32, APIA).

A) Official and information relating to decision making in the public interest

The public information under this Act is divided into two categories: “official” and “office” information.

The official data can be found in the legal papers of the bodies – common, individual and legislative. The principle for access to the legislative acts of the public bodies is that it is provided through their publishing in the State Official Gazette. The Municipal Council’s acts under the Local Self-government and Local Administration Act are displayed on a special board in the Municipal building. They are disseminated through mass media or in another proper way. Access to other papers is provided for under the APIA’s procedure unless there is a legal obligation to publish it otherwise.

Example: the Concession Act, the Public Offers Act, etc.

The office information has a bureaucratic character. It is information obtained through the published orders or procedures of administrations fulfilling their functions as obliged bodies. Office information constitutes opinions, recommendations and consultations. They can be prepared either for or from the body and related to its decision-making or some other activities.

B) Aspects of the right to public information

There is a legal obligation for the central and local authorities to grant both “passive” and “active” access to public information.

- Passive aspect of the information
  Here the information is granted only when there is a written request.

- Active aspect of the information
  In the case of an active access obligation the obliged body initiates the circulation of information. (Art. 14(2))

  - Reporting

It is necessary only for the following hypotheses:
- When the information can avoid a threat to life, health, and safety of the public or their property;
- When the information disproves an already disseminated piece of information which has been proved to be untrue and that reflects the public interest;
- When the information is or can be of a public interest;
- When law should grant the information.

* Publishing*

Art.15, Art.16 of the APIA obliges the heads of the administrative structures and the Minister of the public administration to publish information. The managers of the administrative structures in the system of executive power are obliged to make periodically publications on:
- The description of the body’s duties and list of the acts issued in the remit of their functions;
- Data for the organization, the functions and the responsibilities of the administration of which the manager is in charge;
- Description of the informational means and resources used by this administration;
- Name, address, telephone number and working time of the department that is responsible for responding to written requests for access to public information.

Every manager of an administrative structure is obliged to prepare an annual report on the incoming written requests for information. The report should also include data on the refusals to such requests and the reasons given for the refusals. This report is part of the annual report under Art. 61 (2), that has to be presented to the Minister of the Public Administration. The Minister of the Public Administration should annually publish unified data containing the information under Art. 15 and any other information related to the application of the Act. Moreover, he is responsible for its circulation among the local authorities in such a way that is accessible for the public.

2. What types of public information should the bodies under Art. 3(2) provide

These bodies are obliged only to provide the information passively. In order to grant the information the following conditions should present:
- The information should be related with the body’s obligations;
- The information should not be a trade secret or
- Its circulation should not lead to unfair competition.

Art. 18 of APIA sets forth all the obligations of the media regarding the granting of access.

* The difference between the reporting and the publishing can be found in the form of public presentation. The reporting can be either written or oral. The publishing is always in written form.
III. Exemptions of the right to access to information

1. Characteristics of the limitations of the right to access to information

The right to access public information is not absolute. There are some limitations. The Act guarantees the rights of third persons, the rights of third legal entities’ and the interests of the state (the effective governing of the national defense, the public order protection).

The Constitutional court establishes two criteria with which the limitations should comply:
- They must be provided for by law,
- They must be only for the protection of the public or personal interest as guaranteed in the Constitution.

Art. 14(2) of the Constitution defines these interests:
- Rights and the good reputation of individuals;
- National security;
- Public order;
- Public health, and
- Morals.

Art. 17 of the APIA adds one further interest, that of fair competition between commercial entities. (Art.17).

Restriction of the right to access information should differ from partial access to information.

In cases of restriction the right to access information is fully denied. On the other hand limitation of access results in partial denial to grant the requested information. As a result the expressions “partial access’ and “limited access” are synonyms.

The obliged bodies should precisely determine the scope of the exempted information in every case. Limitations should be interpreted narrowly based on an assumption of accessibility and within the scope of the law.

2. Grounds to refuse access to public information

The grounds to refuse information are specified in Art. 37(1) of the Act:
- State secret;
- Office secret;
- Information under Art. 13(2), APIA;
- The access affects the interests of a third party and there is no expressed agreement from the party concerned;
- The requested public information has been given to the person making the request in the previous 6 months.

• State secret

The regulation governing state secrets does not answer adequately to the requirements mentioned above. There is a List of the facts, records and objects defined as state secrets, which has been adopted by the National Assembly. The list is based on the principle of numerus clausus. It is not in the form of a law. According to the legislative program of the Council of Ministers of Republic Bulgaria such a draft law is in the process of being prepared.

Materials and documents are classified according to this List of facts, records and objects, which are defined as state secrets of the Republic of Bulgaria. The procedure for classifying materials and documents is regulated in Art.39 of the Application Rules of the Ministry of Interior Act. Only a limited number of people defined by these Application Rules have access to these classified materials and documents.

(Refer to Appendix IV)

• Office secret

Many cases arise in which information of office character is declared as confidential only by executive order. In the absence of a law providing for such orders they should be considered as invalid due to the lack of competence of the public body that issued them.

Other interests that are protected as office secrets are:
- Assuring the effective work of the public authorities by avoiding public pressure and illegal activities;
- Protection of personal data of individuals;
- Protection of fair competition.

(Refer to Appendix V)

• Information under Art. 13 (2)

There are two hypotheses under Art. 13 (2):
- The office information that always surrounds the preparation of an official document (opinions, recommendations, consultations)
The office information prepared by the body’s administration that contains opinions in relation to present or future negotiations undertaken by the authority and the data related to it.

The application of this article is not compulsory and the granting of information is at the discretion of the authority concerned.

The basic question to consider in this situation is which interests the denial of granting the information protects. These can be the interests of ensuring smooth negotiations where the aim is to reach an agreement. In order to reach it there are some mutual compromises between the parties. The publicity of this process can lead to possible public pressure. This situation is not a rule but an exception. An example is the negotiation in the field of the defense and the security. On the other hand the public interest during a process of negotiating is obvious.

Regarding the materials concomitant to the draft regulations, it should be emphasized that their availability is very important for building a full picture of the drafting process, the author’s principles, and the arguments “pros” and “cons” he took into account. According to the practices of the democratic countries the Council of Ministers of the Republic of Bulgaria started to organize public discussions on draft laws before introducing them to the Parliament. A constructive public discussion can be reached only by giving the necessary information under Art. 13 (2), par. 1 of APIA. A restriction on access to such information could be justified by exception only in cases when the information falls under one of the other exemptions under APIA.

- The access affects a third party’s interests

When a particular type of information is public and related to an individual or legal entity, a denial for access is permissible. The authorities should not apply APIA in cases when the requested information is related only to the characteristics of the individuals and the legal entities specified in par. 1 of the Additional Rules of the Act. A precondition of this is that the information should not be recorded on a medium with other public information.

The interest protected by the law regarding individuals is their right to privacy of their personal life. Regarding the legal entities the limitation on disclosure relates to protection against unfair competition.

When the information refers to a third person and his/her agreement is needed there is an obligation for the obliged body to ask the third party for permission.. This is a legally regulated necessity. Assuming that the obliged body or the third person defines the necessity, this would mean that not only the law defines the frames of the access to information. This will contradict to the Constitution and Art. 7, APIA.

Example: Such a hypothesis can be found in the Statistics Act.

There is no doubt that the third person’s permission is necessary in order to grant access to their personal data, kept in the public registers.

IV. What is the access to information procedure?

1. Where to request access to information
   The law gives citizens the opportunity to request access to information both orally and in written form, including via email. In any case, citizens should direct their requests to an identified public official. The law itself does not exactly define this person and therefore in order to apply the law, the obliged bodies should specify:
   - A special place for acceptance of the requests for access;
   - A special place for the granting of the requested information.

   This place can be one of the following departments:
   - Reception hall for citizens
   - Press center and public relations department;
   - Official records office;
   - Special department dealing with access to information requests.

   If there is not any special place for accepting the requests under APIA and there is no affirmed practice to register requests and letters in the upper departments, the written requests should be registered in the official record offices. It is absolutely compulsory to register these information requests as well as to give them an incoming number.

2. How to request access to information

   The access to information requests can be sent to the obliged bodies in both written and non-written form. It is necessary to pay attention to the following things:
   - Considering the competence of the obliged body, is it obvious that the requested information will be found in its office?
   - Is the requested information available?
   - Is the required data protected by an office secret?
Is there any technical possibility to grant the requested information?

- Non-written request
  Usually the requests are non-written. If it is possible the information should be granted IMMEDIATELY. The people asking for information have no obligation to explain why they are requesting the information. It is not necessary to prove any legal interest or to present any papers.

- Written request for access to information
  The request should contain the following:

  1. Compulsory: The names of the individuals. The title and the address of the legal entity.
  2. Compulsory: what is the information that requesting person would like to acquire? The information may be presented in the form of a description: for example “I would like to receive access to all information available on...” Another option is to specify the exact titles of the documents that the citizen requires (together with their reference number, the publishing date, characteristics). On the other hand, the documents can be described only with the detail that the requesting person knows about them. In any case, the obliged body must grant access to information. It is not necessary for the requesting person to specify any details concerning the document requested. It is sufficient for it to be described in an unambiguous way.
  3. It is necessary for the requesting person to specify how they wish to receive the requested information. In other words, to specify whether the information is desired.
     - In verbal form;
     - By viewing the information;
     - By receiving a copy of a document.
  4. Compulsory: address for correspondence.

The request for information does not need to be in any particular form: it can be handwritten, typewritten or produced electronically.

If the applicant has failed to put his/her names, the required information and address for correspondence, the written request should not be considered. It is not compulsory for the citizen to specify the way he/she wants to receive the information granted.
4. What is the form we get access to information in

In accordance to the law the access to information is granted in several different forms depending on the wish of the applicants. The applicants can define themselves the required form and the respective institution is obliged to conform to it. It can be required:

♦ Verbally;
♦ By viewing and reading all the available information in place;
♦ By receiving a copy on paper or via another technical medium.

The applicant may ask for the information in several different forms as well. For example, the information could first be viewed and then a copy also requested.

According to the law individuals with visual and hearing disabilities may request the information to be delivered in the most convenient form. In this case the authority is obliged to take this request into consideration.

5. What to expect after the request is submitted

A response to the written request should be sent within 14 days of the application date. The required information is granted by virtue of a decision of the respective institution.

- Decision to grant access to the requested information

In the decision for granting information it is compulsory to be written:

- What part of the requested information is granted access to
  The law gives the opportunity for a partial access to information. This means that if the applicant wants a document containing legally classified data and non-classified data, the access can be granted only after preliminary erasing of the parts which are classified. (Refer to Appendix VII and Appendix VIII)

- For what period of time is the information granted
  It is compulsory to grant the required information for a minimum of 30 days. In the decision the respective institution should point out both the starting and the closing date of the period in which the access is granted.
- Where the requested information can be obtained
  It is compulsory to provide a specific place where the applicant may access the requested information in the desired form. This particularly refers to cases when the applicant wants to view and read the documents.

- Form of the access

- Charges
  Charges can be levied only in order to cover the expenses related to making the information available – copies of paper, recordings, etc. The expenses are paid only on the basis of prices defined by the Minister of Finance in a particular order.

There are several more options for the response, which can be made by the respective institution regardless of the decision for access or the denial of access to information.

- Notification of the need to specify the application for access
  This response is made when the applicant does not define clearly enough the required documentation in his/her request for access to information. This can happen when the applicant has described unclearly the information wanted, for example: “I want information on privatization”.
  The deadline for this notification is 14 days after the registration of the request.

  The applicant’s should respond to this request for further specification within 30 days of receiving the notification. If he/she fails to do it his/her initial application will not be considered any more.

  After providing further specification the applicant should be granted to the information within 14 days of the date of their response.

- Notification for extension of the term for granting of access
  This response is made:

  o When additional time for the preparation of the information is needed: this cannot be more than 10 days or 24 days after the date of the application. It is compulsory to specify:
    - The reason for the extension
    - The revised deadline for granting the requested information
When a third party should be notified. The extension of the processing period cannot be longer than 14 days after the application.

When is it necessary to notify the third party?
It is necessary to ask for the consent of a third party when the information requested contains data referring to a third individual or legal entity. The notification procedure is used when the required papers contain personal information or trade secrets. In all other cases there is no obligation to inform them. Before the granting an “asking for consent” letter should be sent to this third party.

When is it not necessary to notify the third party?
In the cases when the third party is also an obliged body under APIA it is not necessary to send a notification letter. The information should be directly granted.

What are the legal terms of the notification?
The consent letter should be sent within 7 days of the registration date of the request.

How long does it take to get third party consent?
The answer should be sent within 14 days of the consent letter sending.

What to do in case the third party does not give consent?
If there is no answer from the third party, a partial access should be granted. A preliminary deletion of the data concerning the third individual should take place. This data will include only the personal facts and the trade secrets.

What to do in case of a refusal of the third party?
In this case partial access should be granted in a way that is suitable for not discovering the information regarding the third person.

The deadline for sending the notification for extension of the term is also 14 days from the registration date.

- Notification of the re-allocation of the application for access
This is the response when the individual or legal entity seeking the information wants access to documents that cannot be kept by the responding institution due to its competence. In this case, the official should check where the required papers are held. Then the request should be forwarded to the particular competent institution.

The deadline for this notification for re-allocation of the request is 14 days from the registration of the application.

The deadline for the re-allocation letter is also 14 days from the registration of the application.

It is compulsory in the notification for re-allocation to specify the title and the headquarters of the respective authority or legal entity to which the written request is forwarded.

- Notification of absence of the requested information
  This response is made when the requested information is not available to the responding institution at the time the request is made. Decision for refusal to provide access

- The decision for refusal of access to information should contain:
  - The factual circumstances;
  - The legal basis;
  - A disposition;
  - Details of the appeals procedure – term, institution, etc.

The factual circumstances should include a description of the following: who, when, what information wanted; what were the actions of the responding institution; what was the factual circumstances which he/she reaches.

The legal basis is an extract of a legislative act by which the reason for the denial is provided for.

The disposition outlines the final outcome resulting from an analysis of the law.

It is necessary for the responding institution to respond and if it fails to do so it is considered to have broken the administrative procedure as provided by law. The fine is 20-50 levs (Art. 42 (1), APIA).

Every decision for refusal to grant access to information can be appealed in court. (Art. 40, APIA)
